USD PROVOST NAMED TO NAICU PANEL

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Sr. Sally Furay, provost and vice-president of the University of San Diego, has been named along with four other prominent educators to the new legal services review panel of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

The panel will determine how the association will use its legal talent and money to aid independent institutions involved in litigation. The panel expects to be faced primarily with requests for help in cases involving questions of federal aid to students at church-related schools and institutional compliance with federal regulations that allegedly discriminate against independent colleges and universities.

Chairman of the panel is Paul Bragdon, president of Reed College. Other panel members are Paul Hardin, president of Drew University, Fr. Charles Whelan, professor of law at Fordham University, and Thomas Ehrlich, dean of the Stanford University Law School, currently on leave to serve as president of the Legal Services Corp., Washington, D.C.
